2022 is a pivotal year for CFOs. While the pandemic itself has abated, the long-term impacts present ongoing challenges with rapidly evolving needs of clients, employees, competitors and boards. As sustainable finance is shifting to the forefront, CFOs must steward both the financial performance and green finance principles into practice.

What role will data analytics, hyper automation, AI, cloud and security tech play in CFOs' strategies as they navigate choppy waters? How will the impact of climate change and the role of shareholders, prospective investors and consumer sentiment influence the role of the CFO?

And now there is an additional layer of uncertainty, with the ongoing Ukraine crisis having sent shockwaves through the global economy. Could the invasion spark a global financial crisis?
